

Extreme Flood Scenarios.
Maryanne George Ewais

EXTREME FLOOD SCENARIOS

Posted on October 30, 2017 by content

Categories: Energy and sustainability, Essay, Imminent Urban Commons, Maryanne George Ewais, Territory and mobility, Urban Paradigms

Tags: Barcelona, Cities, City challenge, Climate, Climate change, Coast, Coast line, Crisis, Environment, Environmental degradation, Essay, Extreme conditions, Extreme environments, Future cities, Future tendencies, Global Awareness, IAAC, Imminent Commons, Ocean, Planetary urbanizations, Politics, Population, Research, Rethinking Urban Environments, Sea Level Rise, Seoul Biennale 2017, Spain, Sustainability, Sustainable Development, Territorial dimension, Territory, Urban environment, Urban Paradigms, Urban planning, Urban Policy, Urban political ecology, Urban research, Urbanism, Water, Water level, Waterfront

urbanNext Lexicon

Extreme Flood Scenarios
<https://urbannext.net/extreme-flood-scenarios/>

One potential climate tipping point is the response of sea levels to changes in the Greenland and Antarctic ice sheets. Melting of the ice sheets adds liquid water to the oceans and raises global sea levels. Although researchers are working to develop numerical models that will narrow down exactly how fast and how much the ice will melt, development of these models may take more than a decade.

Full content is available only for registered users. Please login or

ISSN : 2575-5374