As part of a wine-growing context, the new building reinterprets the attributes of a gatehouse – a small utilitarian winegrower's construction – and the retaining walls that structure the landscape. The successive plinths, fashioned from old planks of raw wood, are anchored in the slope and create landings that mark out the path.

Under the high thin-beam ceiling, the living space revolves around a central piece of built-in furniture that concentrates the various services. The slender proportion of the large French windows enhances the spacious atmosphere of the ground floor, like in a piano nobile. A small outbuilding, set amid the mass of grape vines, is housed discreetly at the center of the site.
